SERVICES

Our clinic offers you different choices and options for physical therapy

- Pediatric physical therapy
Paediatric physiotherapy, or children's physiotherapy, aims to manage or treat congenital diseases and acquired injuries in babies and children.
- Neurological physical therapy.
Specialized comprehensive evaluation and treatment of individuals with movement problems due to disease or injury of the nervous system.
- Geriatric physical therapy.
Is the branch of physiotherapy that deals with managing physical problems in elderly people
- Vestibular rehabilitation
Vestibular rehabilitation therapy (VRT) is an exercise-based treatment program designed to promote vestibular adaptation and substitution.
- Orthopedic physical therapy
Focuses on the treatment of injuries to the orthopedic system, which includes muscles, bones, joints, tendons, and ligaments.
- Cardiovascular and pulmonary
physical therapy is designed to help individuals improve their breathing and aerobic capacity by teaching them more effective breathing techniques and exercising them under fully-monitored conditions
- Oncology
is the study and treatment of different types of cancer. Physical therapists within this specialty work with patients who have either been diagnosed with or who are recovering from cancer.
- Clinical electrophysiology
A clinical cardiac electrophysiologist (cardiac EP) is a healthcare provider who treats heart rhythm problems.
- Sports
Athletes who have sustained an injury may be very familiar with this physical therapy specialty. Physical therapists who specialize in sports medicine work to alleviate and heal injuries caused while engaging in an athletic activity.

Pediatric physical therapy

Pediatric physical therapy involves the use of therapeutic exercise, manual skills, functional training and other kid-friendly approaches to improve mobility and increase range of motion, strength, flexibility, balance, coordination and endurance.

Paediatric physiotherapists work with children who experience some disruption in their development and their families. Typically paediatric physiotherapists will address motor issues, but their patients may also present with other impairments that affect cognition, language and psychosocial issues.
